They have a tough, hairless, and often reddish skin, as well as two downward-sloping horns on the sides of the head. In the video game Star Wars Battlefront II, the player must fight a Geonosian who is trying to use the droid factories on Mustafar to create his own army. Many Gands choose a strange profession, the Findsmen. Jawas also appear on the planet Arvala-7 in "Chapter 2: The Child", the second episode of the television series The Mandalorian, in which they are depicted with red eyes (recalling Ralph McQuarrie's concept art).[12] Though Jawas are based upon Tatooine, some Jawas have left the planet and built up their civilizations elsewhere, such as the tribe on Arvala-7. They are both killed. On their home planet, Gamorreans exist in a sort of tribal political system dominated by the female sows. The inhabitants of Grizmallt assumed that Beneficent Tasia had been lost, but the starship did, in fact, survive the many hazards of unknown space. The Grizmallt are the original settlers of Naboo. The Geonosians are also the ones who developed the Death Star plans, leading to the race being mostly enslaved under Imperial occupancy as the Death Star itself was being built. Footnotes ^ According to George Lucas, this battle is meant to represent a clash between a primitive society and a more advanced one, similar to the Vietnam War.[14] Citations ^ Vision of the Future, (Book 2 of the Hand of Thrawn duology), 1st edition, 1998. A young or under achieving Gand talks about himself or herself in third person and calls themselves "Gand". There are two main sub-species of Gands: those with lungs, which are very rare, and those without. An example of such would be when Corran and Ooryl were in the mess hall on a Mon Calamari cruiser: Ooryl, in mid-conversation, began speaking in third person, and Corran immediately noticed something was troubling him, with the author (who narrates from Corran's point of view) noting that Ooryl only did this when something was bothering him. There are two main types of Geonosian: the wingless dromes that mostly work as laborers, and the winged aristocrat, which includes royal warriors serving as scouts and providing security to the hive. This mind control exists even after the host's death, although the "Geonosian zombies" have pure white eyes. ^ "Jawas". With the blessing of a famous Jedi Master, the colony ship Beneficent Tasia and its support starships, Constant and Mother Vima, left Grizmallt in search of fortune and glory. If a Gand achieves something notable, they can use their family's surname, but will still use the third person. On Grizmallt, Queen Tasia's dying wish was that this last expedition would find a home deep within unexplored space. Joiners are regular species who become one with the hive. Of them, Jabba the Hutt is perhaps the most famous, appearing in The Phantom Menace, a New Hope, and Return of the Jedi (where he was the first major antagonist.)
